

Week 5 Assignments

Since last week was so intense, I thought it would be nice to give you some breathing room this week, especially with the novel due for next week. Thus, your main focus this week is the quiz and the readings themselves. Please let me know if you have any questions.

Week 5 Lecture

Because of the topic and readings, there will be NO lecture this week. I tried to make the reading questions more thorough as a result (discussing author information, etc.). I will combine ideas from this week into next week's lecture on the novel (which also relates to war). From a technical standpoint, our readings (poetry and short stories) follow the same criteria from the last few lectures, so use those ideas while you are reading.

Week 5 Quiz

This week, I'm making a quiz that will actually count towards your grade. Thus, instead of making you respond to a journal or complete a discussion board, I'll post a quiz that should test your knowledge of the materials. It should be ready by Wednesday. I will email with more information once it is complete.

Week 5 Reading Questions

Your Week 5 questions are posted and ready to go.

Week 5 Discussion Board

This week, the DB is OPTIONAL, so only use it if you think it will be beneficial.

Paper 1 Topics

Remember, your first paper topics are posted under Assignments in Blackboard. While not due for a month, you may want to take a look to see what you will get yourself into.

The Novel

Next week, we will read our first novel, The Sun Also Rises, by Hemingway. While not a terribly long novel, it might help to get a head start this week. There will be a discussion board on the novel next week, just to warn you, so be ready to comment there (on the novel and war).
