

Week 11 Assignments

Week 11 Lecture

This week's lecture is posted. While it mostly discusses works from last week, the goal is to catch us up on the currents before diving into this week's readings. Try to read it while looking back at last week's poems.

Week 11 Quiz

Instead of a Journal or Discussion Board, I'll give you a quiz this week (to give us time to catch up). Note, however, that next week will include a Discussion Board on the novel. I will have the quiz posted by Wednesday and give you through the weekend to complete it.

Week 11 Discussion Board

I'll open a Discussion Board this week, once again OPTIONAL. While we rarely use non-required DBs as a class (and aren't required to), I want a place where you can share ideas or confusions.

NOTE: If anyone wants to post his or her journal from last week (or some ideas from it) to share with the class, I would truly appreciate you doing so. The more we communicate, the more we can get from the course. And, as most of you said interesting things, sharing your ideas could help all of us understand these poems a little more.

Reminders:

- 1) There are not separate reading questions this week – the lecture sets up the readings and they will be included in next week's Discussion Board – but I won't provide specific questions
- 2) Remember to obtain and begin the novel sooner than later. The Book of Daniel is longer than Hemingway's novel, though I would argue more engaging once you get going. Don't wait too long to get going.
